solstice

Like the old tree that buds in spring, with its large imperfect and austere roots comes to bloom in the light when the moment arrives. Solstice 15.04.21

Solstice m.n. A series of lights that were created from the sculptural work of a Montreal artist and the Scandinavian inspiration of a Quebec company.

Fascinated by old materials that come back to life, Jeremy Le Chatelier, believes in balancing rigor and fluidity. This inspiration was the start of the symbiotic collaboration with Luminaire Authentik.

A cart filled with oxidized metal and bags of concrete was what the designer brought to his first meeting with Maude Rondeau, founder and designer at Luminaire Authentik. This became the only constraint of the project: the use of raw untreated materials. Without a prior sketch, Jeremy Le Chatelier's sculptural instinct was catalyzed with the mentoring and teaching of the entrepreneur who was able to guide him through the many technical challenges intrinsically linked to the design of lighting. The raw, hard essence of the fixtures has been mellowed with the clean, functional lines reflecting the company's approach. By leaving room for accidents and accepting the imperfection of the material, the final product was accomplished in complete collaborative freedom.

The lights are signed and numbered and are part of a series of unique works by Luminaire Authentik X Le Chatelier. These pieces are made entirely by hand, mostly from materials found from waste collection centers or construction sites. The fixtures integrate dimming technology from the London based company TALA, who's bulbs can be dimmed down to an atmosphere similar to a candle flame. These once purely contemplative sculptures now fit into their surroundings by supporting a new function, that of lighting. It is no longer just how the work itself feels, but what it gives off.

The 11:07 light will go on presale on April 15, 2021. 20 unique pieces, all signed and numbered. It will be possible to reserve a piece at the launch and customize its color from five pre-selected options, available on the Luminaire Authentik website.
